Medical oncologists including Paul Hamlin (far left) and Steven Horwitz (far right) take part in a meeting of the lymphoma disease management team, a close-knit group of experts that meets regularly to discuss patients.

We've been diagnosing and treating lymphoma of all types for many decades and care for more than 1,200 people with lymphoma each year. What makes the MSK lymphoma team unique is the depth and breadth of their experience in all subtypes of lymphoma and across various disciplines, such as medical oncology, radiology, radiation oncology, pathology, genetics, and bone marrow transplant.

Our team includes world-renowned doctors, surgeons and other experts who have been leading research initiatives and defining the best treatment approaches in the field of lymphoma for decades. The care at MSK is exceptional because patients benefit from the skill and experience of not just one outstanding doctor but an entire team of experts who work together in their patients' best interests.
