

Marcia Levine, BSN, MSN
Perioperative Nursing Director

Marcia Levine is a nurse administrator with extensive experience managing clinical operations. In her previous role as the Senior Director of Surgical Services at New York Hospital Queens, she oversaw inpatient surgical and perioperative services, including endoscopy. In this capacity, she also designed, opened, and managed an outpatient parenteral antibiotic therapy unit.

Ms. Levine began her professional nursing career at NewYork-Presbyterian Hospital and practiced at both of its main clinical campuses. After becoming a staff nurse in the Surgical Trauma Intensive Care Unit at Weill Cornell Medical Center, she subsequently assumed the roles of Clinical Research Coordinator in the Department of Surgery-Division of Trauma and Critical Care and Nurse Clinician in the Neuroscience Intensive Care Unit, also at Weill Cornell, and Patient Care Director of Perioperative Services at Columbia University Medical Center. She received a BSN degree and an MSN degree in nursing administration with distinction from Mercy College in New York.

Ms. Levine is a vital member of the interprofessional leadership team and the executive nursing leadership team of the Josie Robertson Surgery Center (JRSC), jointly reporting to the director of the JRSC and senior vice president/chief nursing officer.