NEWS FROM MEMORIAL SLOAN KETTERING CANCER CENTER

Sharing Knowledge Through Multiple Channels

Physician-in-Chief José Baselga, along with several other MSK clinicians, will be featured in an upcoming PBS documentary, Cancer: The Emperor of All Maladies.

Part of our everyday work at Memorial Sloan Kettering is to help people better understand cancer, in the event that they or a loved one are diagnosed with the disease. Every interaction we have with a patient or a caregiver is guided by our desire to give knowledge and support to those in our care.

To be sure, there is a lot to communicate as we are on the brink of a revolutionary era in cancer treatment. These successes are due in part to advances in molecular oncology and immunity science, two areas where MSK continues to play a leading role in taking findings from the laboratory and translating them into promising treatments. Several MSK initiatives with great potential to improve patients' lives have been recognized recently, including:

- Development of a cell-based therapy to prime the immune system to attack leukemia
- Identification of a genetic mutation that appears to cause ovarian cancer
- Approval of a new immune-based drug treatment (nivolumab or Opdivo™) by the FDA for people with advanced melanoma and people with squamous cell lung cancer

We are excited by these and other advances in cancer care and are eager to share new findings with patients and caregivers. Want to learn more? This issue offers some suggestions.
