Determining FAP Eligibility: To determine what a family can afford to pay, if anything, we calculate a patient's household net monthly income, and then deduct the total amount of routine monthly bills. The amount remaining is what we consider the patient able to afford each month. If a patient's household routine monthly bills are more than or equal to their net monthly income, we would accept whatever the patient's insurance pays as payment in full unless the patient has assets such as a second home, stocks, certificates of deposits, or large savings, or has any other asset excluding retirement or education accounts. Patients with a large amount of assets whose routine monthly bills are greater than their net monthly income may be eligible to make a monthly payment, or they may not qualify for assistance.

Assistance offered: Eligible patients can receive a 100% discount or a reduction on their self-pay balances. MSK will not charge FAP eligible patients more than the amount billed to patients with insurance that covers medically necessary care.
